Would it shock some of you to know that I may actually be bisexual? I have never thought of myself as anything other than straight, but now I realize I'm a bit more open than I ever dared to be before, a result of my past conservative upbringing in which anything even remotely deviant in sexuality was considered "sinful". I now totally reject, for myself or anyone else, that sexist bullshyt. I am just me and always will be true to myself and anyone I should have a relationship with in the future, forever.

I am not at liberty to reveal my new partner's name or even gender, but I am certainly off the market and expect to be for a long time to come. I finally found someone I can be comfortable with and not have to worry about being lied to, backstabbed, or otherwise hurt by like I have been so often in the past. And that is a hell of a lot more important then one's gender or sexual orientation. I just wish I'd come to my senses 20 years ago or more, I would have avoided a lot of grief!

Sam Richards I've been through a divorce too. I know the sense of betrayal all too well.

That's great, to be open with yourself. I feel like at a certain point in your life, why rule it out? God forbid I ever become single again, but I feel like I'd be open-minded. 😊

Well, this was from a year ago, and seeing it again made me reflect on how I often make mistakes for the best of reasons.

You dated a man... I've always assumed you were bisexual

Only because he was a pre-op trans man. Even he always referred to me as a straight guy. I have also been attracted to trans women.

Dale Husband see I'm straight attracted to sic men (men who are born men and who are straight)... I have a lot of friends in the lgbtq community, it just means that everyone has their own preference...

I guess because of that I would never assume that someone who is attracted to trans men or women is fully straight

So I'm not totally straight. I'm more diverse in my sexuality than most straight guys.

Dale Husband it's not that I'm not open-minded, is that everyone has their preference and that is my preference

Thanks for the clarification. I fixed the prior comment.

Dale Husband I mean I said the same thing twice I don't understand where the miscommunication was... But I do think it is pretty awful to say that someone isn't open-minded just because they have a certain preference.

everyone has a certain preference it doesn't mean that they're not open minded or are. if I wasn't open minded then I wouldn't be an ally nor would I have friends in the lgbtq community nor would have I protested for their rights.
it's like Having a preference towards blonde hair or brown hair or blue eyes or brown eyes... I definitely have those preferences also. doesn't mean I'm an asshole, it means I'm a human with my own preferences just like everyone else... If I were you instead of jumping the gun and insulting right away I would definitely read more thoroughly

I truly don't care what your sexual preference is (that's your business, not mine), as long as you're a kind, thoughtful, caring human.
